Not illustrated. 1918 Excerpt: .about a child s vocational aptitude at any point in the school course even from five to six years on, but you find out much more, of course, at or about the time when he is growing up, when he is thinking of adult things, feels that he is becoming a man, that is, from thirteen to say seventeen. Also it is rather fruitless for us to make vocational inquiries much before the time of the legal age limit. Professor Book: Would it be possible to collect in a rather simple but systematic way certain information concerning each student when he is going thru the grades, which might be preserved, and so to bring together a pretty accurate and helpful basis for vocational direction at the legal age? Professor Thorndike: I think we should all accept every word Professor Book has spoken except the one word--accurate. We can accept the word helpful but the less emphasis we make on the precision of the results the better. It is not wise to claim that we can chart out the career of a human being accurately at any time; there are too many disturbances to do it with precision. We can, however, do it better than he will do it without aid. Parents also are short-sighted, in spite of their intimate knowledge of children. An instance brought to my attention was of a boy who was making at a very early age indeed well over $1,000 a year...
