When written to and urged to prepare an argument in support of the Christian Sabbath, as observed by the great body of believers during the centuries and in all portions of Christendom, he hesitated. The circumstances were substantially these: An organization of Sabbatarians, calling themselves Seventh-day Adventists, commenced missionary and evangelistic work on this coast some twelve or fifteen years ago. They travel through the country, circulating their pamphlets and tracts, spending a fortnight or a month in a place; they deliver lectures on prophecy, and with maps and charts make a show of learning.
