Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from Four Great Humanists, Vol. 9 There is one master problem of the ages; - a problem at which have toiled all generations of men, all races, all conditions, all times, all societies; - a problem which includes all others, summing up in its own vast synthesis everything that elsewhere is separately worked out as religion, philosophy, social order, art, science, or mastery of the material world. It is the human problem, as one of its latest students has called it: - how to make man truly human; how to bring him into the inheritance which is plainly his; how to realize for him the kingly destiny which all augury foretells; how to crown him - individually and socially, with that perfection of strength, beauty, and happiness in himself and in his surroundings, without which his. life, however splendid in outward circumstance, must ever seem forlorn and tragic. The ages have toiled at this problem; but for the most part merely on some special element or factor in it, without any adequate vision of its vast scope - without clear consciousness even of what they were doing. Only twice, so far as we know, in the history of the race has the problem as a whole come clearly into view, and received the conscious consideration it calls for: - once in Plato s time, and once again in ours.
