Forgotten Books. Paperback. Condition: New. 282 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.6in. Author ventures to suggest that no one who is thoroughly acquainted with the principles and proofs of what may be justly termed Synthetic, as distinguished from mere Analytic, Phrenology will deny that it forms the most concise and complete system of mental philosophy and practical psychology in existence. All the actual evidence of modern experimental research, as the writer has endeavoured to point out elsewhere, tends to prove conclusively that the brain is not a single organ, brain-segment, or centre. The writer's defence and reply to adverse criticism will be found in the introduction. The system of psychology revealed by Phrenology is greatly in advance of that taught by Lock, Dugald Stewart, and others. For example, their primitive mental powers of Perception, Memory, and Judgment were, in truth, properties of several powers of the mind. According to physiological and phrenological psychology, the mind consists of at least forty-two distinct faculties. Indeed, the evidence in favour of a forty-third faculty appears to be, thus far, reasonably conclusive. It may be truly said that one of their mental powers was a mental faculty of the highest order, i. e. , Imagination (Cognitiveness), to which Dr. Spurzheim gave the name Ideality, not only because he considered it to be the source of all the ideal and aesthetic, but also because its special desire is for advancement the faculty which is the source of all improvement the very origin of progress and civilization. Chapters II. , III. , IV. , and V. contain a Review of certain facts and various speculations relating to (Typographical errors above are due to OCR software and do not occur in the book.)
