Excerpt from 14th Annual Report; National Institutes of Health, Program in Biomedical and Behavioral Nutrition Research and Training: Fiscal Year 1990 Important discoveries over the last decade in molecular biology, genetics, and immunology have provided new opportunities for advances in the biomedical sciences. The techniques for addressing the fundamental questions about the nature of living organisms that have evolved from these discoveries are now beginning to be applied to nutritional studies. Their further application should advance biomedical nutrition research at an unprecedented pace and have a major impact on health.
