Excerpt: .with his odour. the colossus and administered a couple of slaps on the bronze face. What an ineffaceable disgrace and indignity, for which we may well blush even now! But mark the unsullied glory and consolation of the deeds that atone for it. In defence of her violated territory our France, drained of her life blood, surrenders her last offspring, a handful of peasants, very young and very poor, almost all married, snatched pitifully from their home, their wives, and the lowly contentment of their native fields. They were nicknamed Marie-Louises. And the Marie-Louises were sublime. They scarcely knew how to sit a horse, and General Delort said of them, I think the authorities have gone crazy to expect me to charge with such cavalry as this! Nevertheless they swept across Montereau like a torrent, overthrowing the Austrian battalions who were massed in the...
