So how did we get here? In the days before the internet, humans had another friend - the letter. When people fell in love, it was a fall for letter writing. All of a sudden, a damsel who had always felt bothered whenever her dad sent her to the post office would make a U-turn and be willing to go there even before her father said the word. On her way, her heart beats faster but yet there is an unmistakable, decided elegance in her walk, she greets everyone with a smile and even waves at her perceived enemies. She can't wait to see the Post Master's face. But yet; it is not his face that she seeks but the face of another man, hidden in an envelope, painted in words and electrified by unseen emotions. She grabs the letter from the Post Master, her hands quivering with delight and her face shining like that of an angel as she gasps for the air of love for her lungs of love. She vanishes home, for words fail to describe the speed with which she departs for her shelter. The envelope is not yet opened. It is her custom to delay its opening until she had fully enjoyed its presence in her passionate hands; she moves it slowly away from her eyes and wonders what fine words laid in that diamond mine for her. Now she holds it against her chest as the tears roll down her cheeks. She refuses to wipe her tears for those rivers that burn her eyes, stream from within her soul and the more they flowed, the more assured she was...
