Excerpt: .by any accident whatever, other than accidents occurring to persons travelling by railways (1). Therefore the insurance comprises two classes, viz. injuries caused by railway travelling, and injuries arising from any other cause. But if (as the argument for the defendants would imply) it is only a particular description of railway accidents against which the Company insure, then there is a class of accidents happening from travelling by railway which are not insurable, notwithstanding the Legislature has enabled the Company to insure against all accidents, whether by railway or otherwise. (PoLLock, C. B.: Suppose a person suddenly rose from his seat, and struck his head with great violence against the top of the carriage, so as to cause a contusion of the brain, would that be a railway accident P PARKE, B.: Or suppose a person on getting out, not observing that the window...
