Not illustrated. 1820 Excerpt: . from the description I have had from my father, that what we saw was a European vessel. But the Caribs, said Eleanor, are so accustomed to land upon this island--Well, interrupted Ambrose, Caribs or Europeans, would to Heaven they had taken us with them! For my part, I would rather have endured slavery, nay death itself, than what I now feel. And so would I, said Eleanor. Oh, Ambrose, our dear father! can we ever forget him! Peter too A burst of sorrow concluded. The day was spent in lamentations and vain conjectures, and at night they returned with slow and heavy steps to the cave, which since the conflagration had served them as an abode. Here every object reminded them of their loss, and renewed the violence of their grief;--here their dear protector had discoursed with them;--here they had partaken with him the last meal; they wept, they recol, lected a thousand instances of his kindness, which did but aggravate their sorrow. At length, nature exhausted, called for repose. Eleanor sunk into an uneasy slumber: Ambrose did the same, but presently started from it, and began again to ponder upon the dreadful events of the preceding day; his thoughts hurried him from one thing to another, till an idea occurred, which fixed effectually his attention, and revived his hopes. He impatiently waited for the return of day, that he might communicate it to his sister, who no sooner awoke, than he addressed her...
