Excerpt from A Bachelor s Blunder, Vol. 2 of 3 French chateau, with steep roofs, jutting wings, and high windows, which at a later period were fitted with plate glass. The edifice has been a good deal criticised, but no one has ever thought of disputing the beauty of its position. It stands on an eminence, approached from the north by a long, straight avenue, while on the south (towards which quarter the windows of the principal reception rooms look) is a broad terrace, terminated by a stone balustrade, some ten feet beneath which are level lawns and geometrically designed flower-beds, according well enough with the formal character of the building. From the limit of these the ground falls gently to the shores of a lake of respectable size, and beyond that woods stretch away as far as the eye can reach. From every side, indeed, of this happily-placed dwelling an undulating sea of greenery extends into the far misty distance. All the charm of wood land scenery is there, without that sense of Oppression which the too near neighbourhood of trees is apt to convey. The park is not.
