After the suicide of his friend Mia, Adam will find himself in a psychedelic labyrinth, a place where each door leads to a different reality. The life, with the supreme truths being flung open, had never been so real. There was nobody. I took any book. On the cover was written: Theorem of Life. I opened to any page, and was there: Psychedelia: Originating from the Greek, composed by the words: psyche (soul) and delein (manifestation). Indeed, the Greeks had the answer. One manifestation of my soul. This was all a manifestation of my soul. A manifestation of the mind which create conscious effects from subconscious effects. That thing was concerned with me. This is not about Mia, neither life, nor other people, it was with me. It is not enough what you do, the world is interconnected. What you do is a piece in the whole puzzle. This is called Deterministic Chaos. It is one of the supreme truths of life. There is a strong interaction among everyone, because of this, the result is aleatory. What I tell you is: Choose well your piece, mold it well. The rest is aleatory. Mental sanity is all what you have, Adam. Do not miss it, do not lose yourself. But what the hell was that - I thought. Everything was brown, the houses, the streets. I remembered when I was young, when I was playing with play dough, and trying to form beautiful colors, I was mixing everything and it was always brown. But, actually, I hate gray. Our world is gray. You just need to go out on the balcony, window, or through the door to even...
