O Gullane and idly gathered cockles from the burn, And beauteous shells from off thy beach I turn And weep to think those days come back no more. Recalling thus the happy days of yore Like unwise builders, we with the sea-sand Did build play houses on the beauteous strand 5 And these the wild waves dashing on the shore Destroyed as in a moment, and were seen no more. How oft we chased the rabbit from its lair Anon their heads they pop up here and there, And when we thought, why here is one at last, Into its hole quite near it quickly passed. Then sat we waiting till it should come out, The rabbit, too, could wait without a doubt Which when we knew, and had to go away, We look behind, and see it on the brae I Then played we mongst the rocks at hide-andseek Now, round a corner, one doth slyly keek; Then follow shouts of laughter, being found, Which make the rocks from end to end resound. Then sit we on the bank, or walk, or lounge, Then finally undress to take a plunge Into the waters so favourable to health. Some merely touch the rim as if by stealth, Nor further than the ankles are constrained to go, Do as we will - persuade them ever so. Then o'er the head we go, feet in the air We float and swim, beyond their depth some dare; With peltering showers of water, some we tease One youngster on the brink, two big boys seize, Of arms and feet lay hold, they plump him in; Though much against his will, he s...
