Subject: Letting of contracts -- United States. Excerpt: . . . Invoice Approval and Adequacy of Supporting Documentation We obtained and reviewed all 157 contractor invoices submitted during Phase 1 of the Sentinel project by Lockheed Martin and the five PMO contractors to determine whether there was evidence that the invoices had been reviewed and approved in accordance with the PMO invoice-processing policy. We also examined the accompanying supporting documentation submitted by the contractors to determine whether significant charges on the invoices were adequately supported and contractors had submitted the required monthly status reports that link invoiced costs to work activities during the invoice period. Invoiced Equipment and Software Costs We reviewed the purchasing reports and supplier invoices that were included in the Lockheed Martin monthly invoice packages to determine whether the invoiced equipment costs were adequately supported. Lockheed Martin was the only contractor that purchased Sentinel equipment. We performed this procedure for every Lockheed Martin invoice that included equipment purchases. Review of PMOs Time Card Audits PMO policies require contractor time card audits to help substantiate invoiced labor costs. PMO management told us they had conducted these audits, which compared contractor time cards to the labor detail reports included in the monthly invoice packages submitted by Lockheed Martin and the five PMO contractors. The PMO internal auditor showed us copies of several contractor employees time cards that he had obtained and explained the tick marks he placed on the invoices to denote the completion of these audits. Analysis of Labor Costs and Rates To review labor charges included in each monthly invoice package submitted by Lockheed Martin and the PMO support contractors, we traced invoiced amounts back to the detailed supporting documentation...
