Brand New Book. Excerpt from Louisiana Conservationist, Vol. 16: January-February, 1964 Quotas set for transplants by the cooperating agencies include immature Canadas for the Holla Bend National Wildlife Refuge and the White River National Wildlife Refuge in Arkansas; 750 immature birds for the Lacassine National Wildlife Refuge in Louisiana; adult Canadas for the Rockefeller Wildlife Refuge in Louisiana; and run-of - the trap Canadas for the shell-osage state refuge in Missouri. In recent years, a progressively smaller portion of the Canada goose population has continued further South than Missouri during fall migration. Dispersal of the huge Swan Lake Refuge wintering flock by trapping and transplanting will, it is hoped, re-establish a wintering tradition for these geese in the southern portions of the Central and Mississippi Flyways. According to an inventory made October 8, 1963, approximately Canadas were on the Swan Lake National Wildlife Refuge. the Canada goose population there has reached a peak in excess of birds at times during the past several years. The tally on this single important refuge is but one indication that the continental supply of Canada geese is in good shape. Populations of this size soon exhaust the food supply on the refuge and under some conditions, cause damage to crops of nearby farmers. Important underlying factor in the overall picture is that traditionally thousands of these geese should be wintering in the southern states, with a great number in Louisiana.
