Excerpt from Physic and Physicians, Vol. 1 of 2: A Medical Sketch Book, Exhibiting the Public and Private Life of the Most Celebrated Medical Men, of Former Days; With Memoirs of Eminent Living London Physicians and Surgeons The men who commence their career under the most favourable auspices, and with the most flattering prospects of success, do not always obtain the eminence they seek. The race is not always to the swift, nor the battle to the strong. There is a certain ordeal which all men must undergo in their passage through life; and it is very questionable whether he succeeds the best who commences under the most apparently advantageous circumstances. There is such a thing as a man depending too much upon his means, and too little upon himself - small certainties, it has been observed, are often the ruin of men. A celebrated English judge, on being asked what contributed most to success at the bar, replied, Some succeeded by great talent, some by high connexions, some by a miracle, but the majority by commencing without a shilling. The chapter on the Art of Getting a Practice, must be read in the spirit in which it is written. It is a satire on the stratagems and unprofessional conduct of a certain class of practitioners, anxious to advance their interests, and not over-scrupulous of the means they resort to, in order to effect their purposes.
