Excerpt from Glaciers of Glacier National Park From Gunsight Camp, an easy trail leads southward about 1 mile, with an ascent of about 500 feet, to the foot of the main lobe of the western part of the glacier. Climbing the morainal embankment which obstructs the view one looks out on a scene Of surpassing interest and grandeur. The distance across the glacier on a nearly east - west line, is miles; the maximum extent southward from the front of the eastern lobe to the crest of the snow-covered Continental Divide on Blackfoot Mountain is miles; the distance from the front of the western lobe to the divide southeast of Jackson Mountain is nearly the same; the approximate area Of the entire mass is 3 square miles. Lying in a depression in the mountain slope, having a greater extent laterally than in the direction of movement, and having no lobate extension down the valley, it is what is known as a cliff glacier.
