Excerpt: .of testaments, and donation of benefices, as more amply in his signature is expressed. But this archbishop--the unfortunate Hamilton, who a few years alterwards finished his course on the gibbet--was a papist as well as a bishop. The same assembly did not hesitate to send an affectionate letter, drawn up by Knox, to their brethren, the bishops and pastors of England, requesting them, indeed, to deal gently with those of their number who objected to the use of the canonical habits, but not absolutely denying the lawfulness of the said apparel, and admitting that the question as to whe;her it was to be accounted among things indifferent appeared to be agitated with greater vehemence by both parties in the English church than th y could themselves approve of.f A few years after they would not have gone so far in the w ay of concession either to prelacy, or to the Romish tags of the surplice, corner-cap, and tippet. This letter, as we have said, was penned by Knox. Its spirit is decidedly Calviuistic and anti-episcopal; the great Sco.tish refoimer, who had refused a bishopric from Edward VI., lays no restraint upon the expression of his cordial preference for a church divested of all worldly pomp, and of his scorn for the vain trifles which appeared to be held among the essentials of religion by the heads of the English establishment. He even makes bold to characterise the habits that were objected to as the...
