Createspace Independent Publishing Platform, United States, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .This book records the latest chapter in the long history of state denigration of the undeserving poor in the British underclass.In 2011, following the police killing of a black Londoner with alleged gang associations, riots broke out in several cities.The common threads in the rioters were poverty and minority ethnic protests against police prejudice.The government claimed that the real issue was gangs although only 13 of rioters had gang links.They further claimed that gangs arose because of bad parenting.On this basis they launched the Troubled Families Programme which would reprocess 120,000 of these families and turn them into model citizens.Prime Minister David Cameron made these claims in the media: These families are the source of a large proportion of the problems in society.Drug addiction.Alcohol abuse.Crime.A cult of irresponsibility that cascades through the generations. In fact 97 of the families had never received drug treatment;88 were not alcohol dependent;90 were not involved in crime;94 had no gang links.However the families were very poor, socially inadequate and had high levels of illness.75 had a member with a limiting, long standing illness or disability; 52 had at least one child with a statement of special educational needs or other special needs. Unemployment was at 74 mainly because of health issues.45 of adults had a mental health problem. These were families in trouble; not families causing trouble.Their real crime was that they cost the state too much money.The official story was that the TF Programme would save tax payers 9 billion per annum by turning around these families using assertive intervention and tough sanctions .40 of the families were indeed sanctioned.Very few of the families received medical treatment for their many health problems.By 2015...
