Excerpt from Edinburgh Medical Journal: With Which Is Incorporated the Scottish Medical and Surgical Journal The medical outlook on tuberculosis has undergone a radical change within a generation. The discovery of the essential cause has led to a recasting of our conception of the disease. This, in turn, has led to fresh lines of observation. Evidence from many directions goes to show that Nature cures tuberculosis every day. The testimony of the postmortem room is conclusive. The records of Nageli (1900) established that definite indications of tuberculosis were found in 97 per cent. of bodies examined consecutively by him at Zurich, that is, of persons dying in a general hospital from all sorts of diseases and accidents. These careful observations, regarded by some critics as exaggerated, have been substantiated and reinforced by other workers. Recently (October 1917) they were strikingly confirmed by Reinhart (Berne) who, in a long series of consecutive postmortem examinations, found that 96 per cent. yielded evidence of tuberculosis. Reinhart went further and carefully analysed the 96 per cent. , dividing them into cases which showed present activity of lesion...
