Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Foreign Crops and Markets, Vol. 52: March 25, 1946 Barley, if available in adequate quantities for export, could be substituted for a part of the wheat requirements this season, particularly in north Africa where it is extensively used as a bread grain. During the war period, barley was admixed with bread grains in the flour of some European countries, and is now being extensively used in the occupation zones. Regular imports for melting and feed are expected to be greatly curtailed, since grains for food are in such demand for deficit areas.
