Or a succession of small heaps of stones may mark the line. 1 The workers on such a strip or strips pay the government taxes or tithes on the produce of their land. To obtain a place in the list of such fellahin and share in the use of the communal lands is a matter of some complexity and difficulty and, perhaps, of serious discussion amounting to a quarrel. A stranger coming to the village to live cannot 1 Deut. 27: 17. ordinarily enter into the land privileges. A newcomer may occasionally be worked into a privileged family by marriage. The old families of the villages, having had these land rights for years, hold them tenaciously. Newcomers are ordinarily compelled to turn to some other business, to open a shop or go into some kind of manufacture. By a difficult procedure, eased with money, communal land may become the private property of one person and be made into a vineyard or an orchard. It is customary, under intelligent management, to let the village grain lands rest every other year. 1 Dressing the land is not resorted to. The limestone in the soil supplies to some extent this lack. Distinctively farm-buildings, such as barns, etc. , are scarcely to be seen unless it be at some farm-school or foreign colony. S Wheat and barley are the common grains. The peasant knows nothing of oats. Of hay, as the Western farmer raises...
