Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.As members of the baby-boomer generation approach retirement age, much attention has been focused on whether these individuals are adequately prepared for retirement in regard to retirement savings. Research examining retirement adequacy has been mixed with some studies finding that Americans are adequately prepared while others find an insufficient level of preparedness (e.g., VanDerhei, 2003; The Urban Institute, 2009; Skinner, 2007; Munnell, et al, 2007; Hacker, 2008; Love, et al, 2008; Biggs, 2009). Using data from the 2004 Survey of Income and Program Participation, we calculate replacement rates for single individuals between the ages of 55 and 62 by gender, race, educational attainment, and income group. We compare our replacement rates to those found in the literature, and by varying our savings rate assumption, we perform a sensitivity analysis to highlight the impact of differing savings rates on the degrees of retirement preparedness for our sample. Depending on our savings rate assumption, we find median replacement rates that range from 66 percent to 75 percent for our sample as a whole, as well as for men and women. Similar rates are found for our other analysis groups. We find little evidence that levels of preparedness dramatically differ across demographic groups.
