Excerpt from The Services of Leonard Bacon to African Colonization The Life of Mills was at that time a fresh book. It was matter, ofcourse, that the subject of his latest hopes and prayers, the idea of a colony in Africa which should become the ful crum Of effort for the elevation of the African race in America, should be included in the studies of the committee. Our study and consultation resulted in convictions such as these: The colony which had been planted on Cape Montserrado might be made to grow into a free and civilized State; Christian benevolence, North and South, might unite in sustaining the colony and in securing for it not only good government, but schools and all other civilizing influences. Those of the colored people, whether bond or free, who might become inhabitants Of such a colony would find their own condition greatly improved and would have the inspiration of hope for their children. The enterprise would excite neither alarm nor hostility in the slave holding States, while it would be the means of conferring liberty on multitudes of slaves, and would rally to its support the entire Christianity of the South. >|About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
