This official cited limited availability of skilled staff, time, and other resources to conduct the required analyses and research and development. According to EPA, some of the more complex, long-term recommendations include the following: relying less on simplifying assumptions, such as the assumption that the various components of 11 particulate matter have equal toxicity; conducting a formal assessment of the uncertainty of particulate matter emissions; and assessing the expected reduction of any harmful effects other than air pollution or human health problems. For example, EPA is in the process of responding to a recommendation involving the relative toxicity of components of particulate matter, an emerging area of research that has the potential to influence EPA's 12 regulatory decisions in the future. Specifically, the agency could, hypothetically, refine national air quality standards to address the potentially varying health consequences associated with different components of particulate matter. The National Academies recommended that EPA strengthen its benefit analyses by evaluating a...
