Lewis Ramsey was a 23-year-old farmer in Norristown, Pennsylvania, when the Civil War broke out in 1861. Confederate forces attacked Fort Sumter on April 12, and in just over a week Ramsey was mustered into the Union Army. He wrote the 29 letters in this book to his family back home in Montgomery County during two terms of service (with the 4th Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers and 175th Regiment Pennsylvania Infantry). Ramsey is an example of a Northern Democrat who held anti-abolitionist views. He was not alone; political positions, religious beliefs, and racism fueled Northern opposition to the War. Ramsey saw relatively little military action, but he spent 12 months in the Army, did a substantial amount of traveling with his regiment, and was frequently able to take a look around. The observations he recorded in these letters from camp provide a narrow yet detailed glimpse into Civil War America and Union Army life-from the perspective of one Northern Democrat.
