U5 N37 2000 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)46976657 Subject: Climatic changes -- Environmental aspects -- United States. Excerpt: . . . Executive Summary xv and change are less able to do so. It is in this context that climate change will act as major force for coastal and marine environments, interacting with the cumulative impact of both natural and human-caused stresses on ecological systems and resources. With few exceptions, the potential consequences of climate change are not yet being considered in a management context, despite the fact that it has been shown that planning protection or retreat strategies for coastal developments can substantially reduce the economic impacts of inundation and shoreline migration. Some of these exceptions are the coastal management programs in Maine, Rhode Island, South Carolina, and Massachusetts, which have implemented various forms of easement policies to ensure that wetlands and beaches can migrate inland as sea-level rises. However, scientific uncertainties and the long time scales relative to more immediate problems continue to act as barriers to the development and adoption of management responses. Thus, coping strategies should fully consider and integrate climate variability and change into coastal planning, and implement mitigation and adaptation mechanisms that offer the best chance for the long-term sustainability of coastal resources.
