Not illustrated. 1866 Excerpt: .move not an inch, no, not in your thoughts; but when aught that is good leads you on, up, and follow your leader with alacrity. There are plenty of excellent leaders, so that we never have reason to stand still for them. Good men, and good sayings, and good books, and noble plans, and high resolves, and holy resolutions, are all excellent leaders that commend themselves to our judgment and imitation. Look at a child pursuing a butterfly. A dozen times he falls, and a dozen times he rises again to renew the chase. See the man, the hunter in hot pursuit after the timorous hare. Up hill and down, through wood and water, brake and brier, his whole soul is in his object; and shall the capture of a butterfly, and the hunting of a timorous j hare, call up in youth and manhood, more zeal, energy, determination, heart, and soul, than the attainment of a high and hallowed object? Shame on us! Shame on us! Let us take this matter into consideration. Let us meditate on it, resolve on it, act on it, that we no longer dream away i our time listlessly, but ardently pursue things that are good, and follow hard after eternal things. Never think of difficulties when engaged in a good cause, or if you do, think only how they may be overcome. A look upwards, and a step onwards, has helped many a man over a mountain. It is...
