Excerpt: . lava streams unite with the still more extensive sheets of similar rock along the border of Snake River without any marked topographic or other contrast to indicate that they are not portions of a single series. As will be shown below, lava sheets originating from volcanoes in the broad central basin in certain instances entered the mouths of lateral valleys and extended up them, as the waters of a lake would do, for a score or more miles. The direction from which the lava in the lateral valleys flowed can in many instances be readily determined and the extent of the individual lava sheets ascertained and mapped, but this does not seem to have been attempted by the survey referred to above. The most definite and, as it seems to me, the most accurate statement in reference to the sources of the Snake River lava to be found in geological literature occurs in the text of the Boise folio, by Lindgren. He says: The basalts were erupted from a great number of inconspicuous craters, both in the plains and in the adjoining mountains. Their fluidity was remarkable, continuous flows of 50 miles or more being noted. One flow, for instance, followed the South Fork of Boise River for that distance down to its mouth. The lava just referred to was seen by me, and there is no doubt that after flowing fully 50 miles as a stream from 1 to 3 miles wide,...
