Excerpt: . . . 11 rectorate staff members work closely with personnel from each of the national laboratories to promote innovative homeland security solutions. S and T is presently exploring ways for the national laboratories to participate in HSARPA activities. Homeland Security Institute The Homeland Security Act requires that DHS establish a federally funded research and development center known as the Homeland Security Institute to assist the Office of the Secretary and the S and T Directorate in addressing important homeland security issues that require scientific, technical and analytical expertise. To start the process, DHS, working with the Army's U. S. Medical Research Acquisition Agency Activity (USAMRAA) issued an early notice on September 10 seeking expressions of interest and qualifications, which are due today, October 30. The results of this effort will assist DHS and USAMRAA in developing a major solicitation for this activity. Plans call for the staffing of the office to begin November 1 and the formal solicitation to be issued in December. Among other functions, the Homeland Security Institute may be tasked with designing metrics to evaluate the effectiveness of homeland security programs throughout the Federal government including the national laboratories. Universities Through the Office of Research and Development, DHS is contributing to a government-wide effort to build U. S. leadership in science and technology. The office is reaching out to the academic community in an effort to provide students with opportunities to pursue career paths in sectors of science and technology that are vital to our national security. Two examples of this are the Homeland Security Centers of Excellence program and...
