Precipitation with Electrolytes.--As already pointed out silicic acid is not immediately precipitated by all electrolytes. Hydrochloric acid, chlorides of the alkali, and alkaline earth metals give no precipitate but may cause gelatinization after standing for hours, days, or perhaps weeks. It is precipitated immediately by barium hydroxide, - E. Jordis: Zeit. f. anorg. Chemie, 36, 16-22 (1903). t R. Zsigmondy und R. Heyer: Zeit. f. anorg. Chemie, 68, 169-187 (1910). t A. Regarding the effect of the salts of the alkali metals on the precipitation, Pappada found that the anions played little part but that the influence of the cations increased with the molecular weight, caesium having the greatest and lithium the least. Protective Influence of Silicic Acid.--Silicic acid hydrosol does not act as a protective colloid for colloidal gold. It does not hinder the change of color by sodium chloride, neither does it prevent the formation of a turbidity nor a precipitate in silver chloride solutions, unless the amount of chloride ion is extremely small. In the latter case the reaction is obscure, and is not protective action in the ordinary sense. This is...
