I believe that in the nephrocolic ligament I have discovered the principal positive etiologic factor in nephroptosis. The belief that a nephroptosis, because of the action of this ligament, must always be secondary to and the result of a coloptosis (except when due to trauma), and consequently should not be considered separately from, but of necessity with, the prolapsed colon, explains my reason for both the form of the title of the book and the etiologic basis on which the subject is treated. My contention regarding this action of the nephrocolic ligament gives a raison d'être for, and assists materially in proving the truth of, the observation of Glenard, viz.: Enteroptosis without nephroptosis, but never nephroptosis without enteroptosis. This fact being accepted, the consideration of the subject of displaced kidney by itself, ignoring its cause and unavoidable accompaniment in the displaced colon, would be a serious pathologic error and an omission of a full statement of fact, which would tend to lead to the unsatisfactory therapeutic results that have usually attended the treatment of cases of nephroptosis in the past.
