n n n By nature precocious, gentle, and introspective, with sudden flashes of mischievous wit, taking the deepest pleasure in reading and long meditation, Disertori, having finished his schooling, was uncertain whether to devote himself to painting or to literature. He chose painting, and leaving his native Trento, where until that time he BY MAURICE DE LAMBERT (Sec preceding article) had lived, dreamed, and studied, he went to Venice and entered the Academy of Arts in that city. During the one year he remained there he produced many drawings and sketches, no better and no worse than the average student s. The mixing of colours gave him no pleasure, however, and the spectacle of Venice with her voluptuous feast of ever-changing tints touched no aesthetic chord in his soul. 4 a a Discontented and discouraged, he left Venice for Munich, where he studied the...
