All right, father, I'll do what you tell me; but suppose the foreign soldiers should come while you are gone I heard that they were over at Tang Shu yesterday and burned the village. If they should come here, what must I do Mr. Lin laughed heartily. Why, there's nothing here for them to burn, if it comes to that! a mud house, a grass roof, and a pile of ragged bedding. Surely they won't bother my little hut. Its loot they're after money or something they can sell. But, father, persisted the boy, haven't you forgotten Surely you wouldn't wish them to burn your father's tablet Quite right; for the moment I did forget. Yes, yes, my boy, whatever happens be sure to save the tablet. It is the only thing we have worth keeping. With that, Mr. Lin went out at the gate, leaving Kang-pu standing all alone. The little fellow was scarcely twelve years old. He had a bright, sunny face and a happy heart. Being left by himself did not mean tears and idleness for him. This item ships from La Vergne, TN. Paperback.
