Literally, all our emotions, from euphoria to depression, depend on the proteins segregated by our hypothalamus, a region in the lower brain area. Such proteins enter our blood stream and communicate the intended effect to EACH AND EVERY ONE of the cells we are made of. But the most astonishing aspect of the whole process is that the cell s receptors in charge of processing those proteins are the ones in charge of processing other substances like, for example, heroine. So affirming that a person can be addicted to a certain emotion (i.e., to the substance associated with that emotion) is certainly more than a metaphor. And, as our biological mechanism involved is the same that deals with drugs, the laws of addiction are here applicable too: under sustained exposure to a substance, the cell becomes more receptive to it, and as it gets more and more into the habit, it will require growing amounts of the same substance simply to recover its balance. Translated into the world of emotions, the same emotion will be more intense and will last for a longer period of time before the cell gets satisfied to the full. Now, I just have to interrupt you right there before you get too engrossed on this really interesting topic. To find out more about the link between emotions and science, get a copy of this compelling book, Emotions on Trial: Science and the Bible Reveal by Felix Hawk. By purchasing this book, you will get unparalleled information on the following: Get acquainted with the reasons why the brain is the most amazing creation on Earth....
