MAN AND HIS PAST (CLASSIC REPRINT) (HARDBACK)

Forgotten Books, 2017. Hardback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Man and His Past Its subject-matter is sherds, fiints and earthworks. These are no longer regarded as curios to be explained by historical narratives, but as touchstones to verify or condemn them; and as documents from which to construct our account of pre historic times. It is the method of Sherlock Holmes. Epi graphy is a special department of archaeology, but so special that it is usually best left to specialists. It is to archaeology what palaeography is to history, but less important, because for many regions and periods no inscriptions survive. A man may be a good archaeologist without being able to decipher inscriptions, just as a man may be a good lawyer without being able to engross. Archaeologists would do better to confine their probationary years to (for example) making themselves proficient in soil-study, surveying, photography, drawing, human anatomy and the preservation of antiquities, all of which are indispensable accomplishments. The archaeology of existing primitive peoples is an almost untouched field, but it must wait until we have studied the fast-vanishing cultures of the living. The Opportunities will never recur; and buried sites can safely be left. At the moment we want an anthropologist, whose heart is rather in European prehistory, to make a complete, geographical study of a small primitive group. For he alone will direct attention to those points upon which archaeologists require most enlightenment. All the methods of archaeology and anthropology are paralleled in the work of the intelligence department of an army in the field; the identification of units from caps and badges, the interpretation of earthworks on air-photos, the historical evidence of prisoners, critically examined.
