

The Crucifixion and the Jews (Classic Reprint)

By Ludwig Philippson

Forgotten Books. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. 50 pages.

Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.1in. Excerpt from The Crucifixion and the Jews The following essay, on a subject which has so painfully affected the whole house of Israel, cannot be otherwise than interesting to the serious inquirer, who cares more for the truth of history than the triumphant rule of a party, and, strange as it may sound, Christianity is as yet but the latter, not catholic or universal as it generally vaunts to be. The death of its founder has been the theme on which millions of sermons have been delivered, and innumerable books written, and seldom is the subject touched but a denunciation, direct or implied, is uttered against our people, either for having knowingly rejected their redeemer or messiah, or with the crime of having murderously and treacherously put him to death. For either cause the Israelites are then condemned, - for the first to eternal perdition and unquenchable hell-fire, and for the second to the hatred and malice of their fellow-men. Now, it has happened strangely that under both causes we have been slaughtered without mercy, at times under the plea that our bodies...
