It is modeled after Steven Webb's (1980) article on the iron and steel industry. Here it is argued that the exceptional growth and success of the industry chemicals were the fastest growing industry in Germany and by 1890 German firms held 85% world market share in dyestuff production was supported by a high degree of market concentration and cartelization. This enabled the firms to gain large economies of scale and scope through backward integration and product diversification. Dynamic efficiency gains were mainly achieved by relaxing credit constraints, reducing uncertainty, and allocate investment more efficiently. It is further argued that state action played a crucial role in setting up and stabilizing cartels. This analysis is in line with a Schumpeterian view of welfare-enhancing effects of imperfect competition. While these findings obviously do not question anti-trust policy per se, they do question a mechanical view on market structure that is common in much mainstream economic thinking. 60 pp. Englisch.
