Excerpt: . . . that this is the first time we two, you and I, man and wife, have talked together seriously HELMER. Seriously! What do you call seriously Norm. During eight whole years, and more----ever since the day we first met--we have never exchanged one serious word about serious things. HELMER. Was I always to trouble you with the cares you could not help me to bear Norm. Q. I am not talking of cares. I say that we have never yet set ourselves seriously to get to the bottom of any thing. I-IELMER. Why, my dearest Nora, what have you to do with serious things Norm. There we have it! You have never understood me. --I have had great injustice done me, Torvald; first by father, and then by you. HELMER. What! By your father and me--By us, who have loved you more than all the world Norm. Shaking her head. You have never loved me. You only thought it amusing to be in love with me. HELMER. Why, Nora, what a thing to say! Yes, it is so, Torvald. While I was at home with father, he used to tell me all his opinions, and I held the I same opinions. If I had others I said nothing about them, because he Wouldnt have liked it. He used to call me his doll-child, and played with me as I played with my dolls. Then I came to live in your house---- Undis-turbed. I mean I...
