[...]and the very life; not that he knows some truth and has a measure of life in common with men, but that he is the truth-the absolute life. Such attitude, such claimed rights, privileges and powers, belong alone to God. But he goes beyond this. He testifies that he has been from all eternity the manifestation of the very selfhood of the Father. Hear what he says: And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with thee before the[.].
