It would be necessary, however, to divide the office into different branches, each with its head clerk, as is done in the Chief Secretary s Office. It is very necessary that the Chief Clerk should be able to recollect and readily to trace the course of the correspondence which has taken place on any subject of importance. This he cannot be expected to do if the range of subjects is unduly extended. As regards the Junior Clerks, it is certain that no perceptible diminution in the correspondence could take place in consequence of the consolidation, and therefore no decrease in their number could be effected On the contrary, if, as proposed, every Clerk of Works in the ten districts is to be provided with a clerk for...
