Excerpt from Is This a Christian Country?: Address The most childish proofs have been adduced that it is. One of the arguments advanced is that even the President of the United States, when inducted into office, takes his official oath on the Bible. In Prussia, until the year 1869, every Jewish witness was required to take an oath more Judaico, that is, in a Jewish way. He was led to the nearest synagogue and there made to swear with his hand on the sacred Hebrew scroll. Prussian law thus recognized the Jewish oath. The same logic, then, which from our American oath infers that this is a Christian country would have required Prussia at that time to have been denominated a Jewish country, would have compelled it to introduce into its schools Pentateuchal readings in Hebrew and would have made the synagogue its official church. The requirement of an oath on the Bible is not a recognition or honoring of Biblical religion. On the contrary it is a dishonoring of the man or woman from whom the oath is required. It means a distrust of that party's manhood or womanhood in that particular instance unless the party binds himself by the most solemn form and formula his convictions recognize. Whenever a man, however, rises to such a grandeur of personal consciousness that his simple word is his highest and most solemn attestation of truth or of his integrity of purpose, there is not a court in our land in which, nor any occasion on which his mere affirmation will not be permitted and recognized. And were any President-elect great. Enough to demand that his simple...
