OPHTHALMIC LITERATURE, VOL. 7: FEBRUARY, 1917 (CLASSIC REPRINT) (PAPERBACK)

Forgotten Books, United States, 2016. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Ophthalmic Literature, Vol. 7: February, 1917 If twenty ophthalmologists joined together to get for themselves a better ophthalmic journal than is now published in America, it would be possible for them to do it if they were willing to pay nearly one thousand dollars apiece for it. But if they would induce others to join with them in the movement until they numbered two thousand, one hundred times as many would have a still better journal for ten dollars apiece. A very large part of the expense of a scientific journal must be met before the first copy is printed. After that the expense of additional copies is comparatively slight. If the twenty who joined together, were the authors of the most important papers relating to ophthalmology, that were being published. And they published them all in the journal they had established, it would be one well worth reading, and to have at hand to consult in the future. But if there were two thousand interested in the journal, even though nine-tenths of them never published anything, the circle of readers it could offer would be certain to attract the important papers from all sources; and the revenue it could command would enable it to supply a better review of the world's literature than is now furnished by any ophthalmic publication in any language. It is not unknown for an ophthalmologist to pay out of his own pocket one thousand dollars per year to sustain what he thinks is a better periodical devoted to ophthalmology than others already in the field. But if the twenty were willing to unite in doing this, they would still...
