Createspace Independent Publishing Platform, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . David Colton has a good life going for himself when he accepts a birthday dinner invitation from his parents. He goes to it even though nothing like that has ever happened to him in all of his thirty-three years. They feed him a steak dinner - another thing they never did - and then give him a birthday present of ten thousand dollars. They tell him to further his ambitions. In the end, he goes home trying to figure out what they wanted from him because it was that weird. He wakes the next morning to someone knocking on his front door. It s two police officers and they are there to tell him that his parents are dead, the victim of a shooting in a local liquor store. In essence, that starts everything. He learns that four people were killed in that liquor store. Stunned, shocked and grieving, he goes to his parent s home later that day and finds two things of interest. One, is a note inside a folder that his mother left on her computer keyboard. One of the items on the note tells him not to talk to anyone named Rhiannon. It isn t hard to agree only because he doesn t know anyone by that name - only the Fleetwood Mac song. The second is a phone number written on a card in one of the drawers of his mother s desk. When he calls the number, an anonymous voice tells him to, Stay out of this or you will end up like them. When he hangs up and calls it back, he finds that the number has been disconnected. Curious about the place where...
