Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Nomination of James Barton King: Hearing Before the Committee on Governmental Affairs, United States Senate, One Hundred Third Congress; First Session on Nomination of James Barton King to Be Director, Office of Personnel Management; March 30, 1993 Senator Kerry. There are more stories of Jim King in his various incarnations as a pied piper of politics, and I think Ted Kennedy has hit the nail on the head. The Office of Personnel Management is about people and Government is about people. Bill Clinton Obviously has set out to try to reinfuse into government an energy and a sense of inspiration about why we are all in this endeavor. Jim wants to impart this to our Government employees, and he wants to improve the process. Jim King's life has been about just that, from his early days as an organizer in Brighton, Massachusetts, when he worked in some of the neighborhood action programs set up by Lyndon Johnson, to the larger playing fields on which he has had the privilege of serving his Nation, and I just can't say enough for the capacity to teach that he brings to his new assignment, Mr. Chairman. When he announced that he was going to be leaving our Office, there were many reasons that we were saddened, but a number of the younger members of the office came to me and said, you know, he has been a teacher to me, a very valuable teacher, and I think that one of the most important things a person could do in this business is create a whole new echelon, a new generation that learns the lessons, if you will.
