"The group discussion consists of a leader and a small number of individuals who are intent upon the discussion of some problem. The leader sits with the group and is a part of it; he exercises more or less control over the discussion in accordance with the purpose of the meeting. The group itself is limited in number, ranging from ten to twenty; the preferred size lies between ten and fifteen. The spirit and manner of the meeting is informal. There are no set speeches, no announced "sides", no prearranged order of topics or questions to be considered....
