Limitations of Hook s law.--Many substances, such as steel and quartz, conform very closely to Hook s law for small strains, --stretches of one or two thousandths, --but all substances deviate widely from this law when the strain becomes great. Many substances are more or less plastic, and do not conform to Hook s law even for small strains. The behavior of mild steel under increasing longitudinal stress is shown in Fig. 79. The line up to the point p is sensibly straight (strain proportional to stress). Above the point p the line be-12l comes sensibly curved, and a slight permanent set remains if the stress 80 is relaxed. A sub-o0 stance strained until it begins to take a permanent set is said to 30 be at its elastic limit. The given sample of mild steel is at its elastic limit when the stress is about 60,000 pounds per square inch, The behavior of bodies under stress is far too complicated to be fully discussed here. The brief statement given in articles 149 to 153 are mainly intended to call the attention of the reader to the fact that Arts. Ill to 148 treat merely of the geometry which is necessary to the study of elasticity. For full discussions of the elastic properties of substances see J. B. Johnson, Materials of Construction Wiley Sons, 1897, a d article Elasticity, Ency. Brit., 9th ed. H STRETCH IN HUNDREDTHS Fig. 79. and the...
