Forgotten Books, 2016. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Hard Times: And Other Stories Dickens established a weekly periodical, called Household Words, on the 30th of March, 1850. On the 1st of April, 1854, he began in it the publication Of the tale of Hard Times, which was continued in weekly instalments until its completion, in the number for the 12th of August. The cir culation of Household Words was doubled by the appear ance in its pages of this story. When published in a separate form, it was appropriately dedicated to Thomas Carlyle, who was Dickens s master in all matters relating to the dismal science of political economy. During the composition of Hard Times the author was evidently in an embittered state Of mind, in respect to social and political questions. He must have felt that he was, in some degree, warring against the demonstrated laws of the production and distribution of wealth; yet he also felt that he was putting into prominence some laws Of the human heart which he supposed political economists had studiously over looked or ignored. He wrote to Charles Knight that he had no design to damage the really useful truths of political econ omy, but that his story was directed against those who see figures and averages, and nothing else; who would take the average of cold in the Crimea during twelve months as a reason for clothing a soldier in nankeen on a night when he would be frozen to death in fur; and who would comfort the laborer in travelling twelve miles a day to and from his work, by telling him that the average distance of one inhabited place from another, on the whole area of England, is only...
