Purchasers can download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1883 Excerpt: .writers. You can see it done under the watch if you are skeptical. Three hundred and forty words a minute have been written in skeleton outline on the machine on a special run of small words. Our business is conducted on what we call the high plane plan, which is based on three suppositions: 1st. Liberality is the best advertisement. 2d. The world is wider than is generally supposed. 3d. Bread cast upon the waters will return after many days. Situations obtained for competent pupils, etc., etc. The commencement of another circular from the same school is so appropriate and fittingly describes itself that it is too good: Since the coming of the electric light more gas has been used than ever before. This might be descriptive of the circular, with the accent on the word gas, for indeed I never saw so much gas used before, and I appeal to you, Messrs. Editors, and enclose the circular. The author adds that he thinks phonoscribing will aid shorthand. Here he is a little off. At least if it does not aid shorthand any more than the paper from which I am quoting, shorthand will be decidedly left, likewise phonoscribing. Being extensively advertised, it will call the attention of the business and professional public to the enormous saving of time, money and vexation effected by all brief systems of recording thought. In other words, phonoscribing is destined to overturn every other system of rapid writing....
