Institute of Education, United Kingdom, 2003. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book. The first part of this lecture reflects on the disadvantaged London lives many of the capital s children are presently forced to experience and the implications this has for their schooling. The later part commends aspects of the writings of two long-dead Londoners the eminent lawyer, Thomas More, and the great political polemicist and literacy critic, William Hazlitt. Each writer at different times in England s history introduced into its culture his own distinctive way of thinking and discourse, and it is these styles that are worth re-engaging with at this particular juncture, as we consider the scope, nature and potential of school reform, not just in London, but generally.
