Over the years, our extensive reviews of DODs major weapon system Cost, Schedule, and acquisitions have usually found positive outcomes when programs follow Performance Issues for the evolutionary, knowledge-based strategy espoused by the best practices New Acquisition Programs of leading commercial firms and now established in DOD policy. This includes establishing a solid business case that accurately and realistically matches available resources (technologies, money, expertise, and time) to warfighter needs. The Defense Acquisition Performance Assessment report in January 2006 also found that a disciplined business approach was needed to improve DODs weapon system acquisition process. One particular and key practice recommended was for time-certain development programs - delivery of the first unit to operational forces 3 within about six years from the Milestone A decision point. We have usually found poorer outcomes - significant cost increases, reduced 3 A project enters technology development at Milestone A. The purpose of this phase of development is to reduce technology risk and to determine the appropriate set of technologies to be integrated into a full system.
